5 Tips to Better Teen Body Image

1. Don't criticize your teen's appearance. "The most important way to set kids on the path to loving their bodies is, first off, don't criticize or tease your child about how they look. If they are overweight, praise them for any efforts that they are doing to eat a healthy diet, get the right amount of sleep, and exercise every day," says Gellner.
2. Be a healthy role model. Obsessing about your appearance and weight will demonstrate your feelings and opinions about yourself, which tells your teenager that your worth is based on your appearance. That simply is not true and very unfair.
3. Remind your teen that every person has a body part they feel sensitive about and celebrities don't really look like how they may appear. Gellner advises: "If there is a particular body part they are sensitive about...focus on another part of their body they feel good about. Remind them that models and other celebrities in magazines and on TV have a lot of people that help them look the way they do, including people to airbrush their photos before they are printed."
4. Be a good listener and support your teen. Another aspect of the Dove study on self-esteem noted that the top wish between teen girls is for their parents to communicate better with them. "This helps your child realize that their feelings and thoughts really do matter" and that, "you are there for them whenever they need you" says Gellner.
5. Help your teens appreciate what their body does every day. Focusing on what we do have rather than what we don't reminds us that there is more to life than our appearance and ourselves. Our bodies really are pretty amazing in what they let us do every day.
6. Although there will always be outside influences on both our teenagers and ourselves, help your teen navigate the body shaming epidemic and build better self-esteem.

FIFA RIDS CORRUPTION BY SIMPLY REMOVING THE WORD FROM THEIR NEW CODE OF ETHICS

(FIFA is an organisation for the International Federation of Association Football)

1. Despite having pulled off the 2018 World Cup without a hitch, FIFA's host appointment was marred by controversy. Russia and 2022 hosts Qatar are nations with human rights violations. They should not have the ability to host major sporting tournaments. Corruption in FIFA is nothing new, and their latest move proves they still haven't learned a thing.

2. FIFA has stripped the word 'corruption' from their new code of ethics and are going all in on defamation. Take a look at the following from section 22.2 of their new code of ethics: "Persons bound by this code are forbidden from making any public statements of a defamatory nature towards FIFA and/or towards any other person bound by this code in the context of FIFA events." This essentially keeps things vague enough to allow FIFA to punish those who speak out against them.

3. This is dangerous. Why? Because FIFA president Gianni Infantino already thinks the world of himself. This authoritarian stance isn't going to help paint a picture that corruption is no longer a problem in soccer's governing body. In fact, I'd say it does just the opposite. FIFA is working to keep people quiet. To me, this reeks of cover-ups.

4. Furthering my hypothesis is section 12.1. This section states "Bribery, misappropriation of funds and manipulation of football matches or competitions may no longer be prosecuted after a lapse of 10 years." Give me a break! In the former code of ethics there was no limitation on time. No matter when an offense was uncovered, you'd be punished for it. Now, as long as you can manage to keep something quiet for 10 years, you're in the clear. FIFA's offering a way out. On top of that, prosecutors only have five years to complete cases that breach this code, so timing is... tight. How convenient.

5. This makes me wonder what senior figures like Infantino still have to hide. Full disclosure, I haven't combed through the code of conduct myself just yet, but what I've seen so far doesn't make me feel as though we're going in the right direction. After the FBI uncovered various forms of corruption in 2015 leading to multiple arrests, including ex-FIFA president Sepp Blatter, many thought we may finally be turning over a new leaf. However, it is now abundantly clear that is not the case.

6. Infantino claims FIFA "is a transparent organization", but the manner in which they have implemented their new code of ethics proves that they are not. There is an ethics committee that worked to implement these changes, but it was done entirely in private and the chambers of the committee have not been allowed to speak to the media. Have I mentioned how convenient this all is? "Transparency behind closed doors" must be FIFA's new slogan.

7. FIFA has "eradicated" corruption by implementing ways around corruption. Those who wish to speak out against FIFA better have their facts straight, or be prepared to have hell rained down upon them by FIFA themselves. We can only hope that the current regime faces the same fate of former President Blatter, who was ousted by the very code of ethics he implemented.

8. Wishful thinking, I know.
